

The primary goal : Employment

The Ecoles de Gestion et de Commerce (Management and Business Schools) that make up the EGC network are true business schools. Created by and for businesses, the EGC schools are run by Chambers of Commerce and Industrie and recognized by the French government. The schools offer a three year degree course during which students are in constant contact with the business world, primarily via in-company training periods lasting at least 25 weeks. This ensures that EGC students can enter the employment market confident of success : they are employed within 3 months of completing their studies.

A job within 2 months

Studying at an EGC school guarantees students rapid access to employment and successful integration into the business world. Students spend an average of 2 months looking for a job after leaving school. EGC graduates make fast progress in the marketing, the sales, the international and administration departments.

A true business school

EGC students are in direct and constant contact with the realities of business world throughout their studies. The teaching staff is partly made up of working directors and executives. The in-company training periods in particular offer students the opportunity to put what they have learned into practice, develop their ability to adapt, define their professional goals and make essential contacts.

Training real professionals

When recruiting students, the EGC schools select candidates whose profiles really correspond to the needs of businesses, particularly in sales and marketing. Students receive individual attention throughout their studies in order to make the most of the potential and become creative and responsible managers. EGC students of course have an international approach to economics, which is so vital to the development of companies.

The Training Period Abroad

International Training and Placements Abroad

Since the economic world has entered in an era of globalization, it is essential for students to follow courses directly linked with international business. This is the reason why, our school, which belongs to the EGC Network (School of Management and Commerce) goes beyond classic language courses to closely study the worldwide economy and offers the students the opportunity to follow trainings and find summer jobs abroad.

The EGC network, develops programmes of exchange with European and American universities, firms and enterprises to give the opportunity to students to work or study in foreign countries.

In our school, a training period of, at least, 3 months is compulsory, to fulfil a complete scheme. More and more EGC Students are therefore following the trend of working in the field of International Trade and Commerce.

A wide-spread Network of Schools

Twenty nine schools are part of the EGC network throughout France and DOM-TOM. There exists at least one school in each region of the country which gives the opportunity to the students to put their theoretical skills into practice within the firms. Our school has developed very close relationships with European firms as well as with local enterprises allowing the students to widen their knowledge and professional experience through different duties and different languages.

Taken from "A la recherche du sens interdit", a play written and performed by the students themselves